

ABSTRACT

A method provides legal reasoning analysis for determining a law and includes presenting a legislative objective of the law via a computer network accessible by multiple participants, determining an initial law corresponding to the legislative objective, presenting an initial image that does not fit in with the initial law and potentially obstructs the legislative objective, and determining a second law by revising the initial law to remove the potential obstruction caused by the initial image that does not fit in. Presenting the image that does not fit includes presenting a proposed image that does not fit in via the computer network, receiving votes on whether the proposed image that does not fit obstructs the legislative objective, and presenting the proposed image that does not fit in as the initial image that does not fit in when a majority of the participants agree that it obstructs the legislative objective.